BOISE - Central District Health Department officials are investigating a number of confirmed salmonella cases that may be related.

There have been about 30 cases that have tested positive, CDHD said.

The health department says the Boise Co-Op is associated with the salmonella outbreak. The CDHD says they are currently interviewing those who have been infected.

CDHD spokesperson Christin Myron says, "From those initial interviews we were able to discern that several of those people, actually all of them, had purchased something from the deli at the Co-Op."

According to the CDHD, the Co-Op is fully cooperating with the investigation.

CDHD says it appears the time frame of exposure was between June 1 and June 7.

If you have any signs or symptoms - including fever, diarrhea and vomiting - you are urged to talk to your health care provider.
